Italian & English Sparkling Wines

English Sparkling wines have surged in popularity recently as their quality has improved and production has increased. Even some of the French champagne houses have invested in vineyards in the South-East corner of England. Fitz Sparkling Wine is a new style made using the Charmat method, which produces a soft fresh easy-drinking style that isn't too serious or too dry. Ridgeview, first planted in 1995 on the chalky soils of the South Downs in Sussex, is now an established vineyard making more serious champagne-method wines from Pinot Noir, Pinot Meunier and Chardonnay. Italian Prosecco is still incredibly popular too if you are looking for a lighter more delicate style that slips down a treat.
